One might expect the sheep (lead by Shaun of course) to have an adversarial relationship with the sheep dog or the farmer, but that is not the case. Sure, they may try to pull the wool over their eyes from time to time, but they also often treat them as friends. The only really consistent adversaries on the show are the pigs, and even they are relatively minor in their villainy. Highly ...

Lanolin is an oil produced by sheep and can be found in their shorn wool. This beneficial oil keeps their wool coats waterproof and deodorized. In its pure form, it looks like a yellow-colored, waxy substance. Despite its oily nature and power to keep skin hydrated from the outside in, it won't clog pores. "It's soothing for dry, chapped skin and also protects against cold, harsh weather ...

Another great article. The term black sheep is so interesting because it is relative to the given family's normal practices. For every great humanitarian, it is so nice to have a Billy Carter urinating on a runway. People that are different give life its beauty, in my opinion.
